

ground level inversion (in atmospheric chemistry)

The inversion of the normal temperature gradient in the atmosphere; the temperature of the air increases with increasing height of the air above the ground. This leads to poor mixing of gases released below the inversion.

1990, 62, 2193