

thermal ionization (in mass spectrometry)

Takes place when an atom or molecule interacts with a heated surface or is in a gaseous environment at high temperature. Examples of the latter may be a capillary arc plasma, a microwave plasma or an inductively coupled plasma.

1991, 63, 1548; O.B. 203